Bad Mules vs. the Art of Valued Clinical Documentation

By

Joanne Wright, RN

Joanne is a Product Manager for clinical tools within the GE Healthcare IT division. One of the hats she wears is to ensure computer software developed always keeps the intended user in mind as well as the workflow where the features will be used. Building on her clinical background in Nursing and Speech Pathology, she has found translating clinical requirements to technical engineers and then explaining what was developed back to the requesting partners has often been called upon. Having additionally served in Implementation and Training she has always felt privileged to collaborate with healthcare organizations throughout the United States as well as the international community to find solutions for clinicians and the patients they serve
